

It would be wrong for the FCC to limit local content on XM Radio. Just as they are now allowing satellite television to broadcast local stations, satellite radio should be allowed to broadcast local content. If The National Association of Broadcasters members can't change in order to compete, that is their fault and they shouldn't use my tax dollars to stifle competition. Since I have gotten XM Radio, I have noticed how terrible local radio is. Every station plays the same lousy content. Make them compete on a level playing field, not on one in which the satellite providers are hampered by excessive regulations. Thank you.
